

Protect patients and staff against outbreaks, contagions, and communicable diseases

Infection Prevention

Pathogen protection is more important than ever

Protect yourself and your staff from deadly pathogens.

Protective garments and disinfectants are a strong line of defense between a clinician and a deadly contagious disease.

New CDC guidelines for healthcare workers

The CDC is continually announcing new guidelines for protecting healthcare workers from contagious diseases, including Ebola. The recommendations call for protective wear that provides full-body coverage, leaving no skin exposed. "It's an increased margin of safety," says CDC Director Tom Frieden. "Because even a single healthcare worker infection is unacceptable."

Be sure your staff is well-equipped with protective garments, such as full-body suits, gowns, gloves, shoe covers, and masks. Look for items that are fluid-repellent and fluid-resistant, offer the coverage you need, and have high filtration efficiency.

Disinfect to protect

Disinfectants also play an essential role in defending against contagious disease. The CDC recommends the use of an EPA-registered hospital disinfectant with a label claim for a non-enveloped virus such as the norovirus, rotavirus, adenovirus and poliovirus. * SaniGuard meets these CDC and EPA guidelines. This powerful antimicrobial area fogger sanitizes an entire room in fifteen minutes. Boasting a 99% efficacy rate, SaniGuard is approved to disinfect flu, MRSA, and 39 other various germs, bacteria, fungi, and viruses.
